

Quinto's Mummy Museum.
Located inside El Piquete (XVth century).

It was in the last restoration stages when a serie of burial sites inside the church which had perfectly remained in natural state, was discovered. Thus a phenomenon, which goes down all over the country, is known as the mummies of Quinto.

After several years of research, paperwork and preventive preservation, it is in the 2018 when the town council launches a museum to show all that collection of mummified human remains of the XVIIIth and XIXth centuries together religious and funerary objects which appeared during the three decades of archeological excavation.

This museum has become in the first exhibition area with these characteristics in our country, since, besides it holds fifteen bodies with perfect preservation conditions, it shows them in the same place where they were buried. All this allows for visitors to live an unique and unprecedented experience, and to find themselves facing the life and the death in an unrivalled setting like El Piquete.

Quinto's Mummy Museum

QUINTO

www.momiasdequinto.es

In the center of the middle river Ebro valley and in the boundary between its garden and the dryness of the steppe around, Quinto is located, the capital of the government in the "Ribera Baja del Ebro".

Any more than 2.000 years of history, this little riverside town collects past time remains that have shaped the appearance of the historical center as well as the nature of its 2.000 residents. It was called with the name of "Quintus" by the romans due to it was 5 milestones far from the roman colony "Lepida Celsa". Overlooking all the historical center, the ancient Our Lady of the Assumption church is located and it is commonly known as El Piquete. It is a large dimensions building of mudéjar masonry. With a defense and military origin, the beginning of the construction is in the early years of the XVth century, and it is attributed to the mudéjar alarife Mahoma Ramí, architect of the Pope Benedict XIII (known as Pope Luna).

This building, with a local government ownership, was reopened in 2017 for sociocultural use after more than three decades of restoration. The impact of the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939) caused most of the village was destroyed, so it was required a great and quick care intervention in order to people inhabit it again. The Battle of Quinto left, besides numerous civil losses and a divided society, like in many other places, several public buildings in ruins, being El Piquete the most stunning image in the war disasters.

Quinto's Mummy Museum consolidates this village like a tourist destination and together with other resources the visitor could enjoy an absolute experience. The Saint Miguel, Saint Antón and Saint Roque medieval doors, the postwar buildings like the public school, the town hall or the new church of Our Lady of the Assumption, the renaissance palace known as La Casa del Cura (The Priest's House, XVIth century). The river Ebro and its meanders, its river islands, and its riverside forest that you could see going through the Ebro Saint Jacob's Way. The hill with the big steppe areas, the social irrigated lands or the flora and fauna that could be seen in the ornithological reserve El Planerón.

“Quinto Medieval Doors: Saint Miguel, Saint Antón and Saint Roque. They are an archeological ensemble medieval buildings which were used like doors in town and some of them like customs. The village was closed with these doors together a walls made up of the back of some houses which a little is preserved of due to the growth of the village after the Spanish Civil War.

Besides, Quinto has a desirable gastronomy that you could verify in whichever its restaurants. It is pointed out the Aragon lamb, its orchard products like asparagus o vegetables, the Fuentes de Ebro certificate of origin onion which is produced in our fields, products derived from the pork... a feasts that any visitor shouldn't miss.

We invited you to visit Quinto. To go all over it. To enjoy it. We recommend planning a weekend trip, staying in our lodgings and concluding your journey with other interesting near places like Rueda Monastery, the archeological roman site "Lepida Celsa", the archeological iberian site "Cabezo Alcalá", the old village of Belchite, the old village of Rodén, Fuendetodos Goya...
